Between 1945 and 18 October 1954, it was determined that an airfield with some new buildings was established near the town of Joehvi (Jeve) (5923 N/2712 E) which had been entirely destroyed during the war and was reconstructed after the war. [] jet fighters were stationed at the field. [] This was inferred from the fact that jet fighters were seen flying from Kohtla-Jaerve (5922 N/2722 E). After the war this locality was enlarged to three times its former dimension because the Estonian oil shale center was located in its vicinity.

[] Comment. [] reports covering the period prior to 1950 indicate that an airfield is located 4 to 5 km south of Joehvi, 1 to 2 km west of Ahtme (5919 N/2727 E) and that this field was occupied by a Soviet fighter unit in 1947. According to some reports covering the years of 1949 and 1950, the field was enlarged. Soviet parachute units were previously observed in the Joehvi-Ahtme-Puru (5919 N/2722 E) area.
